

Geometric Proof for Pythagoras' Theorem

You might be familiar with Pythagoras' theorem for right angled triangles. where for a right angled triangle with sides a , b , and c , where c is the hypotenuse we know that

$$c^2 = a^2 + b^2.$$

But can we be convinced that this is in fact true? it seems a bit outlandish.